Point of Care Testing Association Welcomes SEKISUI Diagnostics as its Newest Member

Global leader in diagnostics and biochemistry products joins the growing U.S. advocacy coalition seeking to facilitate access to safe, effective, and cost-effective patient testing at the time of treatment

Washington, DC – The Point of Care Testing Association (POCTA), the advocacy coalition that seeks to facilitate access to safe, effective, and cost-effective patient testing at the time of treatment, announced today it has welcomed SEKISUI Diagnostics as its newest member.

POCTA members are comprised of manufacturers of point-of-care diagnostic technologies that enable physicians to monitor chronic conditions, diagnose illnesses, and provide timely information for patients in a variety of care settings. Together, POCTA and its membership work to advance effective policies to improve health through better access to point-of-care testing.

SEKISUI Diagnostics is a global manufacturer of innovative diagnostic tests, reagents, diagnostic systems, and raw materials for diagnostic and pharmaceutical use. With advanced manufacturing facilities in the U.S, Canada and the U.K., the company supports healthcare professionals, distributors, and manufacturers in improving patient outcomes.

“POCTA members are the changemakers driving innovation within healthcare, creating the technologies that are expanding the array of conditions physicians can monitor, diagnose, and treat at the point of care,” said Eric Zimmerman, on behalf of POCTA. “SEKISUI Diagnostics has more than 40 years of experience designing fast, accurate, and reliable point-of-care testing products for use in a variety of diagnostic specialties, and we are honored to welcome them as our newest member, as our advocacy efforts will benefit greatly from their expertise.”

About The Point of Care Testing Association (POCTA)

The Point of Care Testing Association (POCTA) seeks to facilitate access to safe, effective, and cost-effective patient testing at the time of treatment. POCTA brings together other like-minded stakeholders, thought leaders, and experts to help inform and advance effective reimbursement policies that can improve health outcomes by supporting access to POC testing. Laboratory testing furnished at the point of care (POC) benefits patients and the health care system. POC testing enables physicians to monitor chronic conditions, diagnose illnesses, and provide timely information to patients in a variety of care settings, from clinics to pharmacies to community centers to non-hospital facilities (e.g., assisted living).
